

To the FCC:

AT&T was busted up once for the exact same thing they are attempting to do now. Once again they are trying to dominate and destroy the Telecommunications industry. They are stomping out competition so they can dominate the market and overcharge for their services.

AT&T has recently introduced data caps on both it's mobile and residential network. T-Mobile does not do this. These data caps fly in the face of our Governments push to make internet and all the opportunities it brings to as many people as possible in our Country. Stifling peoples ability to use the internet reduces innovation and peoples access to information. It is absolutely ridiculous. We already lag most of the Western World when it comes to access to internet and it's speed. It is absolute insanity for our Government to allow policies that make this problem even worse.

AT&T is trying to stomp out other Companies that are now delivering media into peoples homes or to their mobile handsets in favor of their own content. This is not right, it is anti-competitive and unfair.

Personally I am all for Governmnet keeping it's hand off private business. I believe that a Business also should be able to deliver and price a product in a fair way but when a Business controls something that is now essencial to every day life and now wants to limit peoples access to it that is when Government needs to step in.

Sincerely,

Kevin J. Danker
4733 55th Street
San Diego, CA 92115